Edelweiss Asset Reconstruction

may force us to reduce our tuition fees or increase our spending in order to retain or attract faculty members and students and to pursue new market opportunities which may have an adverse impact on our enrollments, revenues and profitability.

Further, due to a shift in the teaching methods from traditional model to innovative virtual model, use of technology for digitizing the content and creation of virtual classrooms adds to the competition. Any newer technology can be disruptive for our Company's tutorial business and can increase competition in the market. In addition, free online content availability poses a threat to our Company which can have an adverse effect on our revenues and profitability.

F. We are exposed to operational, logistical, and competitive risks in the online sale of books and study material packages across domestic and international markets, which may adversely affect our business performance and revenue.

We sell books and study material packages online in both domestic and international markets, exposing us to various operational and market risks. The segment is highly competitive and saturated, leading to pricing pressure and increased marketing costs. Our dependence on third-party platforms makes us vulnerable to changes in their policies, fees, or service disruptions, which could impact sales and profitability.

Logistics and supply chain complexities—particularly in cross-border sales—such as inventory management, shipping, customs, and currency fluctuations, can increase operational costs. In addition, compliance with data privacy laws is critical; any breach or non-compliance could result in penalties & reputational damage.

Shifting consumer preferences toward digital formats and the need to maintain positive online reviews also pose challenges. Furthermore, compliance with diverse international regulations—covering taxation, consumer protection, and intellectual property—is essential, and any failure may lead to legal or operational consequences.

Any of these factors could have a material adverse effect on our business and revenue.

G. We may face business, operational, and reputational risks in providing white-labeled study material, given our limited control over its end-use and the potential for content misuse. Client discontinuation, outdated material, or intellectual property issues could adversely affect our revenue and overall financial performance.

We provide white-labeled study material to private tutors, schools, and other educational institutions, which exposes us to several business and operational risks. As these materials are customized and marketed under the client's brand, our visibility and control over end-user delivery and usage are limited. Any errors, inaccuracies, or perceived shortcomings in the content—whether due to our oversight or the manner in which it is delivered by the third party—could result in reputational damage, even if our brand is not publicly associated with the material.

Additionally, institutions may choose to discontinue or replace our materials with their own content or switch to a competitor, particularly in a price-sensitive and highly competitive environment. Such discontinuation may occur without significant notice, especially where contracts are short-term or informal.

Intellectual property risks also exist, as white-label arrangements increase the likelihood of content misuse or unauthorized distribution, which may affect our ability to protect proprietary material. Moreover, any failure to update the content in line with evolving curriculum standards or examination patterns could reduce its relevance and lead to loss of business.

Any of these factors could adversely impact our revenue from this segment and may have a material effect on our overall financial performance.
